Medical Authority Forbids Vaccination During Epidemics and English army. Opposes Compulsion.

The highest medical authorities, even the strongest pro-vaccinators advise the suspension of all vaccination during epidemics of contagious diseases. See Osler's Modern Medicine, edition of 1913, Vol. 1, pages 847 and 848. This recent work of high authority also condemns all compulsory vaccination and admits its dangers as follows: After advising against all vaccination during epidemics of dangerous diseases

The great number of cases occurring in the Massachusetts camps and at Camp Dix, in New Jersey, with the big mortality of 25 per cent, seems to show thatwhatever the disease truly is-it is surely, in its worst types a very dangerous and fatal infection and calls for the most serious and careful precautions, one of these being the suslike vaccination, while such a dan- influenza and further strengthens gerous epidemic exists.

Grave Nature of Present Epidemic

From the rapidity, severity and mortality of the disease it would seem not to be a true influenza, as Pape's Diapepsin tablets cost little heretofore known, and as its worst strengthened by the fact, just reis the "streptococcus" which is found in the worst forms of "blood tococcus, which is the chief germ esting confirmation of this point, as found in all bad pus infections and follows: abscess formations. tween Influenza and Vaccina-

Another interesting point in this connection is the actual relation between influenza and the two closely related diseases of vaccination and smallpox. Of course, you know that vaccination and smallpox are simply varieties of the same disease and that modern vaccine virus origit inates directly from human smallpox, which is transplanted to the cow and thence used from the cow on the human body, instead of being taken directly from some natural or inoculated disease of the cow, called "cowpox," as in the original vaccination of Jenner, which was human arm and thence from arm was long ago given up and pro-You must also know that small-

In fact true smallpox might be described simply as influenza with eruption and mild smallpox or vaccination as influenza without eruption! Epidemics Actually Caused by Vaccination.

There is an attempt made in some of the official reports to deny that these epidemics of "foot and mouth disease" caused by vaccination could be or were transmitted to mankind in virus and were limited to domes tic animals, but this I believe to be Logical and Medical Relation Be- a grave mistake, as I have the most convincing evidence that this disease was so transmitted to many human victims both child and adult with most awful effects in 1902 and 1908 and is frequently transmitted to mankind in vaccine virus.
